Spanning Centuries . . . blending cultures

As its name foretells, here is a furniture theme at mid-point between mellow traditional and sleek contemporary. It is a superb expression of design integrity achieved not through compromise, but through a sensitive unity of past and present, a sympathetic meeting of East and West. Thus cleanly contemporary forms are enriched and softened by the timeless furniture traditions of Europe and Asia. ■ Three cultures cast their shadows on Meridian . . . the continental traditions of Europe . . . the legendary grace of Persia . . . the pure sense of proportion of the Far East. Yet

Striking yet serene . . . the bedroom is a welcome retreat

Meridian is altogether of today . . . and destined to find a warm welcome in America's realistic scheme of living. ■ Meridian is calculated to bring unmistakable sophistication into every room in your home. Beyond your first impression of its contemporary simplicity, you will discover . . . and continue discovering . . . a suave subtlety created through a wealth of refined detail. Small wonder Meridian has proved so appealing to home-makers who crave contemporary styling with the warmth of traditional overtones; who appreciate the subtle texture and beauty of fine woods; who insist on versatile furniture that functions; and who seek a furniture design that will reflect their own good taste for years and years to come. The more you live with Meridian, the more its timeless appeal will grow, just as with a lovely piece of music. ■ Cosmopolitan as a world traveller, Meridian is equally at home with a rich Oriental rug or glittering vinyl tile. Picture it in your home . . . and you'll quickly discover why!

The woods in Meridian

So beautiful is the wood color and texture in Meridian, that many homemakers will consider it an integral part of their color scheme, and not simply a background for other colors. Finished to a satin-like lustre, it has a warmth and depth that is reminiscent of the Persian cabinetmaker's art. Richly grained butternut veneers are polished to a mellow tawny brown, then subtly antiqued and distressed to blend a feeling of old and new. Contrasted with the butternut are accents of swirling, highly figured maple burl, finished to almost the rich texture of fine leather. When maple burl overlays are used as backplates for door and drawer pulls, they reflect a hardware treatment characteristic of 18th century English furniture. When they are used as contrasting inset panels within the furniture itself, they echo a sensitive Oriental feeling. (You'll see this in the 964-131 Buffet or 914-220 Mirror.) The third wood in Meridian is sturdy pecan solid parts employed for structural strength.

The hardware in Meridian

Even a brief study of Meridian will show how completely the hardware is in harmony with the furniture it ornaments, and how greatly it contributes to the beauty of the cabinetwork. Traditional forms have been contemporized in simple yet forceful designs, and executed in fine brasses with a soft antique finish. There are three different styles of hardware, creating interest and variety: The classic bail pull set on a backplate of rich maple burl. Originally, this furniture styles of the later, it re-emerged in furniture, with the 18th century master designers. Now it returns to today's homes in a beautifully contemporized adaptation. The graceful pendant and key pulls on small maple burl backplates are simple in shape, Oriental in feeling, elegant in effect. The latch pull on a slender vertical backplate of matching antiqued brass contrasts in shape and direction with the first two hardware styles, and proves as functional as it is handsome. Note the contour of the wood frames on backplates are mounted. Escutcheons (plates framing keyholes) are also maple burl overlays, in a simple which the or shields oval shape.

Cane

One characteristic of fine Chinese cabinetwork was the use of cane to accent and enrich the furniture. The same is true with Meridian. You'll find touches of cane in the headboard of the 914-549 bed and others, in the backs of the 964-712 and 964-713 dining chairs, in the side panels of the 994-230 round cocktail table and 994-400 book table. There is also a lower shelf of cane in the 994-340 corner table. Note an interesting point in the dining chairs . . . the cane back actually forms a double curve, one curve running in a vertical direction, one curve in a horizontal direction. Two types of cane are used in Meridian . . . the open octagonal weave which tends toward the traditional, and the smaller closed square weave which is more contemporary in feeling.

Travertine

Selected pieces in Meridian are offered with Travertine tops, adding variety and interest to the collection. Quarried in southern Italy, this handsome Travertine is unusual because of the onyx veins running through it. These veins add to its beauty and value. Look for the Travertine tops in the 914-131 and 133 dressers, 914-441 bachelor chest, 914-621 night stand, 964-131 buffet, 964-511 serving cart, 994-212 cocktail table, 994-313 end table, and 994-311 lamp table.

What to look for in Meridian

Look for clean rectilinear (straight or rectangular) forms that are softened by subtle curves. For example, the legs of chests and tables taper in a gentle curve at the foot, thus creating a "splayed" effect (curving outward slightly) instead of a completely straight line. Note too how the molding which frames door and drawer panels is curved at each inside corner, producing a rounded rectangular form, as in the 914-131 dresser or 964-130 buffet. ■ Look for the beautiful way that each piece is framed by the sculptured post (vertical support) and top rail. The post and leg are one continuous unit . . . there is no joint or break in the lovely unbroken line. This handsome post and rail treatment is altogether contemporary in feeling, yet it has overtones of Oriental design. ■ Look for "functioning" cases, made possible due to Meridian's smooth straight posts. Chests, dressers, buffets can be grouped together to form unified arrangements, custom-planned to your own individual needs and tastes. ■ Look for the beautiful effect of shoji paneling on the sides and fronts of cases. Vertical and horizontal lines give the impression of separate panels joined together, as is so often seen in Oriental furniture and architecture. This shoji effect is achieved in two ways . . . through carving (cutting into) as seen in the sides of the 914-410 chest, and through molding (raising from the surface). The molded method is seen in the 994-406 low door chest, where "frets" (rails or bands) are superimposed on the body of the case, as a structural or architectural design element. ■ Look for frets used another way; to create contrasts and break flat surfaces into interesting patterns. In the sides of the 994-212 cocktail table frets separate the butternut panels from the square maple burl inserts. And in the 994-404 low drawer chest, frets set off the small butternut panels whose grain runs in a different direction to the large panels. ■ Look for lovely patterns formed by the matching and contrasting of veneers. Not only in the sides or fronts of pieces, but in their top surfaces as well, such as the 994-210 cocktail table or the 964-340 round dining table. ■ Look for asymmetrical or irregular treatments in the fronts of cases, such as the 914-133 dresser. This freedom from rigid regularity adds visual interest, dramatic beauty, and provides functioning utility. ■ Look for the graceful medallion shape that reflects the influence of Persian design. You'll see it in the headboards of the 914-546 and 549 beds, the back of the 964-710 and 964-711 dining chairs, the side panels of the 994-230 cocktail table and 994-400 book table. ■ Look for craft detail. The traditional construction methods used by the renowned 18th century English cabinetmakers are re-introduced in Meridian. For example, almost everywhere you find a corner or meeting of two pieces of wood, you will also find a mitered joint. Mitered construction means that a horizontal member and a vertical member have been bevelled (cut diagonally) so they will join at an angle, rather than a sharp straight edge. This seemingly small detail indicates more costly construction methods and produces a perfectly finished joint with a softened, slightly rounded effect. ■ In the overall design and feeling of Meridian, look for a clarity, purity and simplicity of line that is nevertheless forceful and strong; an unerring instinct for form, and sensitive awareness of balance and proportion; dignity and refinement achieved through restraint in design and ornament, and details that are meaningful but subtle. Look for sophisticated elegance and timeless beauty, combined with functional design that is intended to serve as well as to be seen.

Spanning Centuries . . . blending cultures

Striking yet serene . . . the bedroom is a welcome retreat

Meridian is altogether of today . . . and destined to find a warm welcome in America's realistic scheme of living. ■ Meridian is calculated to bring unmistakable sophistication into every room in your home. Beyond your first impression of its contemporary simplicity, you will discover . . . and continue discovering . . . a suave subtlety created through a wealth of refined detail. Small wonder Meridian has proved so appealing to home-makers who crave contemporary styling with the warmth of traditional overtones; who appreciate the subtle texture and beauty of fine woods; who insist on versatile furniture that functions; and who seek a furniture design that will reflect their own good taste for years and years to come. The more you live with Meridian, the more its timeless appeal will grow, just as with a lovely piece of music. ■ Cosmopolitan as a world traveller, Meridian is equally at home with a rich Oriental rug or glittering vinyl tile. Picture it in your home . . . and you'll quickly discover why!

The woods in Meridian

So beautiful is the wood color and texture in Meridian, that many homemakers will consider it an integral part of their color scheme, and not simply a background for other colors. Finished to a satin-like lustre, it has a warmth and depth that is reminiscent of the Persian cabinetmaker's art. Richly grained butternut veneers are polished to a mellow tawny brown, then subtly antiqued and distressed to blend a feeling of old and new. Contrasted with the butternut are accents of swirling, highly figured maple burl, finished to almost the rich texture of fine leather. When maple burl overlays are used as backplates for door and drawer pulls, they reflect a hardware treatment characteristic of 18th century English furniture. When they are used as contrasting inset panels within the furniture itself, they echo a sensitive Oriental feeling. (You'll see this in the 964-131 Buffet or 914-220 Mirror.) The third wood in Meridian is sturdy pecan solid parts employed for structural strength.

The hardware in Meridian

Even a brief study of Meridian will show how completely the hardware is in harmony with the furniture it ornaments, and how greatly it contributes to the beauty of the cabinetwork. Traditional forms have been contemporized in simple yet forceful designs, and executed in fine brasses with a soft antique finish. There are three different styles of hardware, creating interest and variety: The classic bail pull set on a backplate of rich maple burl. Originally, this furniture styles of the later, it re-emerged in furniture, with the 18th century master designers. Now it returns to today's homes in a beautifully contemporized adaptation. The graceful pendant and key pulls on small maple burl backplates are simple in shape, Oriental in feeling, elegant in effect. The latch pull on a slender vertical backplate of matching antiqued brass contrasts in shape and direction with the first two hardware styles, and proves as functional as it is handsome. Note the contour of the wood frames on backplates are mounted. Escutcheons (plates framing keyholes) are also maple burl overlays, in a simple

which the or shields oval shape.

Cane

One characteristic of fine Chinese cabinetwork was the use of cane to accent and enrich the furniture. The same is true with Meridian. You'll find touches of cane in the headboard of the 914-549 bed and others, in the backs of the 964-712 and 964-713 dining chairs, in the side panels of the 994-230 round cocktail table and 994-400 book table. There is also a lower shelf of cane in the 994-340 corner table. Note an interesting point in the dining chairs . . . the cane back actually forms a double curve, one curve running in a vertical direction, one curve in a horizontal direction. Two types of cane are used in Meridian . . . the open octagonal weave which tends toward the traditional, and the smaller closed square weave which is more contemporary in feeling.

Travertine

Selected pieces in Meridian are offered with Travertine tops, adding variety and interest to the collection. Quarried in southern Italy, this handsome Travertine is unusual because of the onyx veins running through it. These veins add to its beauty and value. Look for the Travertine tops in the 914-131 and 133 dressers, 914-441 bachelor chest, 914-621 night stand, 964-131 buffet, 964-511 serving cart, 994-212 cocktail table, 994-313 end table, and 994-311 lamp table.

What to look for in Meridian

Look for clean rectilinear (straight or rectangular) forms that are softened by subtle curves. For example, the legs of chests and tables taper in a gentle curve at the foot, thus creating a "splayed" effect (curving outward slightly) instead of a completely straight line. Note too how the molding which frames door and drawer panels is curved at each inside corner, producing a rounded rectangular form, as in the 914-131 dresser or 964-130 buffet. ■ Look for the beautiful way that each piece is framed by the sculptured post (vertical support) and top rail. The post and leg are one continuous unit . . . there is no joint or break in the lovely unbroken line. This handsome post and rail treatment is altogether contemporary in feeling, yet it has overtones of Oriental design. ■ Look for "functioning" cases, made possible due to Meridian's smooth straight posts. Chests, dressers, buffets can be grouped together to form unified arrangements, custom-planned to your own individual needs and tastes. ■ Look for the beautiful effect of shoji paneling on the sides and fronts of cases. Vertical and horizontal lines give the impression of separate panels joined together, as is so often seen in Oriental furniture and architecture. This shoji effect is achieved in two ways . . . through carving (cutting into) as seen in the sides of the 914-410 chest, and through molding (raising from the surface). The molded method is seen in the 994-406 low door chest, where "frets" (rails or bands) are superimposed on the body of the case, as a structural or architectural design element. ■ Look for frets used another way; to create contrasts and break flat surfaces into interesting patterns. In the sides of the 994-212 cocktail table frets separate the butternut panels from the square maple burl inserts. And in the 994-404 low drawer chest, frets set off the small butternut panels whose grain runs in a different direction to the large panels. ■ Look for lovely patterns formed by the matching and contrasting of veneers. Not only in the sides or fronts of pieces, but in their top surfaces as well, such as the 994-210 cocktail table or the 964-340 round dining table. ■ Look for asymmetrical or irregular treatments in the fronts of cases, such as the 914-133 dresser. This freedom from rigid regularity adds visual interest, dramatic beauty, and provides functioning utility. ■ Look for the graceful medallion shape that reflects the influence of Persian design. You'll see it in the headboards of the 914-546 and 549 beds, the back of the 964-710 and 964-711 dining chairs, the side panels of the 994-230 cocktail table and 994-400 book table. ■ Look for craft detail. The traditional construction methods used by the renowned 18th century English cabinetmakers are re-introduced in Meridian. For example, almost everywhere you find a corner or meeting of two pieces of wood, you will also find a mitered joint. Mitered construction means that a horizontal member and a vertical member have been bevelled (cut diagonally) so they will join at an angle, rather than a sharp straight edge. This seemingly small detail indicates more costly construction methods and produces a perfectly finished joint with a softened, slightly rounded effect. ■ In the overall design and feeling of Meridian, look for a clarity, purity and simplicity of line that is nevertheless forceful and strong; an unerring instinct for form, and sensitive awareness of balance and proportion; dignity and refinement achieved through restraint in design and ornament, and details that are meaningful but subtle. Look for sophisticated elegance and timeless beauty, combined with functional design that is intended to serve as well as to be seen.
